RASHFORD TACKLES RACISM

Star turns his attention to abuse on social media

MANCHESTER United's Marcus Rashford has got the Government to take action on school meals, but can he get social media companies to deal with racists?

by Ian Eddy

Rashford and several other Premier League players have spoken out in the last week about abusive racist messages they were sent online. He said that it was "humanity and social media at its worst".

"Yes I'm a black man and I live every day proud that I am," he said. "No-one, or no one comment, is going to make me feel any different."

He said it would be irresponsible to share the messages. "I have beautiful children of all colours following me and they don't need to read it. Beautiful colours that should only be celebrated."

Bournemouth's Junior Stanislas has also been sent racist messages. He told the BBC that it would help if social media accounts were verified, so people can't hide behind anonymous profiles.

Twitter and Instagram say there is "no place" on their platforms for racism, but many people think that they don't try hard enough to tackle abuse.

Hollie Varney from equality and inclusion organisation Kick It Out told us: "We are always disappointed when footballers receive racist abuse on their social media channels – it's unacceptable. We will continue our work to make football a game where everyone feels they belong, regardless of their background. We have to learn to appreciate people's individuality, and it's important we treat everyone as equal. We want to see social media used in a positive way, for education and the power of good, not for hate."

FOOTIE FUNDS

A football fan from Hertfordshire is using his art skills to help raise money for non-league clubs. Artist Sam Edwards has been painting football grounds for free and donating the pictures to the clubs so they can be sold on. He's so far painted Ware, Ullswater United and Ponte Colls (below) and many more. Sam said he decided to combine his two passions after hearing that clubs were struggling in the current pandemic.

DRIVE-IN TOUR

Billionaire Boy by David Walliams is set to go on a drive-in tour this year. The popular book has already been a hit in theatres, but the only difference this time is that instead of sitting in theatres, people will sit in their cars to enjoy the performance. The tour will take place this April and visit 15 different places across the UK.

HONEST HEADTEACHER

A London headteacher is thought to have made history by becoming the first to publicly announce his sexuality to pupils. Nicholas Hewlett, the head of St Dunstan's College in Catford, revealed he is happily married to another man during an online school assembly. He said he hoped by sharing the information, it would give his pupils the courage to be true to themselves too.

A family from Manchester travelled to do their food shopping in an ambulance, with the emergency blue lights on! The group drove to Asda in the second-hand ambulance, before going into the store. Police were alerted and the ambulance was immediately seized. The driver was also arrested.

EGYPTIAN TREASURES

A display of ancient Egyptian artefacts is set to tour America and Europe. Ramses and the Pharaohs' Gold will look at treasure from the ancient Egyptian royal dynasties. It will visit five cities, including Paris and London, from November 2021 to January 2025.

GREAT LOSS

Freddy, the world's tallest dog, has died aged eight. The Great Dane measured 226cm (7ft 5in) when he stood on his hind legs, scooping him a Guinness World Record in 2016.

RIP CAPTAIN TOM

Captain Sir Tom Moore has died with COVID-19 at the age of 100. The WW2 veteran raised more than £30 million for NHS Charities Together, and broke two Guinness World Records – becoming the oldest person to get a No1 single in the UK charts and raising the most money during a solo charity walk, lifting the spirits of the nation. In May, he was knighted by the Queen at Windsor. The Queen has sent a private message to his family.

FILM FEST FOR ONE

A Swedish nurse has won an unusual competition to watch an entire film festival on her own – on a remote island, in a lighthouse! Lisa Enroth beat thousands of film fans to the bonkers prize and is now enjoying a whole week of movies as part of the Gothenburg Film Festival. She's staying at the Pater Noster lighthouse on Hamneskär island, off the coast of Sweden, with no phone or computer. This year's festival is being streamed online, due to the pandemic. Lisa has been working on COVID-19 wards herself, so we hope she's enjoying her well-earned break!

TOP CATCHER

A gamer from Britain has managed to collect one million Pokémon on his phone. Twenty-year-old Alex Kelly from Dundee is one of only a few people in the world to reach the impressive number on the Pokémon GO app. He's now walked more than 17,000 miles on his quest to catch the virtual monsters.

NEW MCB LEADER

The Muslim Council of Britain (MCB) has elected its first female leader. Zara Mohammed is now the new secretary general of the organisation, which aims to empower Muslim communities. The 29-year-old said she hopes her new role will inspire more young people and women to become leaders.

BADGER CULL CONTROVERSY

THE Department for Environment, Food & Rural Affairs (DEFRA) is looking at bringing an end to its controversial policy that allows the mass culling of badgers. DEFRA has suggested that by the end of 2022, it won't give farmers new licences to kill badgers.

Since 2012, the Government has backed farmers in culling badgers, with the aim of stopping the spread of bovine tuberculosis (bTB).

Environmental science expert Professor Robbie McDonald, from the University of Exeter, told First News: "There is strong scientific evidence that badgers are involved in maintaining bovine tuberculosis, which is a serious disease for cattle and can affect people."

But the National Farmers' Union has said that it wants culls to continue, saying they are "clearly delivering successful results".

However, the effectiveness of culls has been questioned by many scientists. Lord Krebs, who led the largest study so far of culls, said in 2019 that "all the recent scientific evidence points to a central role of cattle-to-cattle transmission, and focusing on killing badgers is probably a distraction from the main story."

Professor McDonald said: "Evaluating whether [badger culling] works is hard and takes time. It is especially hard knowing if and when to stop, and what might replace it."

The Government aims to vaccinate cattle and badgers to stop the spread of bTB, but a vaccine for cows is still five years away, and badger vaccination is difficult.

Professor McDonald says that "capacity to carry out vaccination is limited and needs to be expanded."

SAFER INTERNET DAY

ON 9 February, it's Safer Internet Day in the UK. This year the day's theme is "An internet we trust: exploring reliability in the online world".

Safer Internet Day is an annual event dedicated to celebrating the information and opportunities available online, while also teaching young people about some of the dangers that can be found on the internet.

This year, the day is focused on how we can decide what to trust online, and teaching young people to spot and speak out against harmful and misleading online content.

To get involved, and find advice, games, quizzes, films and more on how you can stay safe online, head to www.saferinternet.org.uk.

DOGS USED TO BE SIBERIAN WOLVES

NEW scientific research published in Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences suggests that all modern-day pet dogs originated from wolves in Ice Age Siberia!

Scientists from Europe and the US looked at DNA samples and examined archaeological evidence.

They found that every dog in the world (including pugs, poodles, dachshunds and Chihuahuas!) is thought to be related to grey wolves from eastern Siberia, which were domesticated (tamed) around 21,000BC.

They believe that during the last Ice Age, around 21,000 to 17,000BC, wolves were forced to rely on human camps for scraps of food, since their usual prey of creatures like reindeer and bison was in decline.

It was then that the wolves began to be domesticated and by 13,000BC were much more like pooches as we know them today.

Humans and dogs crossed from Siberia into the Americas on a strip of land that is now covered by the waters of the Bering Strait.

Can you believe that these two are distant cousins?

STAR-SPOTTING!

It's time to get starry-eyed

LOOK to the skies and spot some stars, because this year's Star Count is here.

CPRE, the countryside charity, is calling on the public to help it count stars in the night sky this month. It wants to see what effect the light from buildings and streetlights is having on our view of our galaxy, the Milky Way.

To take part, all you have to do is pick a clear night between 6 and 14 February, look up at the constellation of Orion and see how many stars you can spot. You can do this from your garden, a balcony or a bedroom window.

Once you've made your count, send your results to the charity and it'll get busy adding them to a big map of the UK. If it finds areas where people can only spy a few stars and lots of light pollution, it will work with local councils to tackle the problem.

Light pollution doesn't just hinder our magical views of the sky, but it can also affect wildlife and its natural patterns.

Check out how you can join the Star Count, as well as lots of top tips, at www.cpre.org.uk.

SNOW JOKE FOR BINMAN

iStock

Should the binman have been sacked? Let us know at first.news/polls

A BINMAN in Herefordshire has lost his job, after kicking the head off a child's snowman.

Nineteen-year-old Callum Woodhouse was caught on a CCTV camera kicking the snowman, while he waited for a bin to empty into his truck.

Mr Woodhouse was later told by Herefordshire Council's waste contractor that he would not be returning to work for them.

But thousands of people disagreed with the decision to sack him. Many said it seemed unfair and that the snowman would have melted away anyway. Others feel the company made the right decision and it was mean-spirited of him. What do you think?

EDITOR'S COMMENT

LAST year's Black Lives Matter protests helped to highlight the racism that many people still sadly have to put up with.

Unfortunately, anonymous social media accounts allow people to send racist abuse, while the social media companies aren't much help when it comes to tracking down those responsible. The good news is that most people think this kind of abuse is totally unacceptable, and the country has shown that it is united in making racism a thing of the past.

WORLD'S FIRST ELECTRIC AIRPORT

THE world's first airport for electric aircraft is being built in Coventry in the UK.

Air-One will launch later this year and become the hub for electric vehicles, including flying cars (eVTOLs), air taxis and delivery drones.

The project is being run by urban-Air Port, after it won the Government's Future Flight Challenge. The aim of the challenge was to develop greener ways to fly. It's hoped this new airport will be able to tackle both congestion and air pollution.

There are plans to develop more than 200 similar sites in the next five years.

BLUE LIGHTNING SEEN FROM SPACE

European Space Agency

BLUE jets of lightning have been spotted by scientists on board the International Space Station (ISS).

Whereas we're used to seeing white forked lightning here on Earth, it's a whole different story above the thunderclouds! Blue jets, as they are called, are bursts of lightning that shoot up from the top of clouds into the Earth's atmosphere.

Scientists on the ISS say they saw five flashes of blue light, each lasting around a fifth of a second. Four flashes came with pulses of light called elves. These are like rings of energy that start small and expand out into a much bigger circle.

The amazing phenomena was seen during a thunderstorm that was happening above Nauru, a tiny island northeast of Australia.

Although the jets were spotted on 26 February 2019, the information surrounding it was only published last month in the science journal Nature.

THE VACCINE DEBATE

SHOULD we send coronavirus vaccines to other countries who need them, before vaccinating younger adults here?

That's the question some in the UK are asking, after it was predicted that the UK will end up with lots more jabs than we need – after buying around 5.5 doses per person.

Trade Secretary Liz Truss has said that Britain cannot simply become a “vaccinated island”, while COVID-19 rages in other nations in the world.

“We're only going to solve this issue once everybody in the world is vaccinated,” she explained, but said that it was “too early” to suggest what might be done with the extra vaccines.

The debate began after the European Union suggested that it could block millions of COVID-19 vaccine doses from entering the UK – before the EU quickly turned its back on the idea.

What do you think? Should the UK vaccinate all Brits before helping other countries out? Let us know your thoughts in our poll at first.news/polls.

DINO DISCOVERY

Sally Wilder

A FOUR-YEAR-OLD girl has discovered a dinosaur fossil in Wales, in what has been described as a spectacular find.

Lily Wilder was walking with her dad Richard along Bendricks Bay in Barry when she found the fossil.

Lily's mum Sally said: “It was Lily and Richard who discovered the footprint. Lily saw it as they were walking along, and said: ‘Daddy, look’. When Richard came home and showed me the photograph, I thought it looked amazing.”

The fossil was removed from the beach and taken to National Museum Cardiff, where it will be studied and protected for future generations to enjoy.

Bendricks Bay is known as a good place to find dino prints, but this is one of the best examples found in the UK.

It's not known what dinosaur species the footprint belongs to, but it is believed to be around 220 million years old.

KIDS' MENTAL HEALTH REPORT

A REPORT by the Children's Commissioner for England says we need a “rocket boost” for children's mental health funding.

Anne Longfield's report has found that, although children's mental health services have improved in the last four years, they are “still unable to provide the help hundreds of thousands of children require”.

With lockdowns and school closures affecting children over the last year, she says: “As an absolute minimum, all schools should be provided with an NHS-funded counsellor, either in school or online.

“We have seen how the NHS has risen to the scale of the COVID-19 crisis for adults. We owe children... a mental health service that provides the help and support they need.”

● Military seizes control
Myanmar's military has taken control of the country, and arrested the country's newly re-elected leader Aung San Suu Kyi and other members of her party, the National League for Democracy (NLD). Phone lines and the internet were cut off, and in Yangon, the former capital city, military trucks were parked outside the city hall. The army, led by General Min Aung Hlaing, agreed to hand power to a civilian government a decade ago. Aung San Suu Kyi said the military was trying to take over again, and urged citizens to protest. The NLD won a landslide victory of 396 out of 476 seats in the November election, while the military-backed Union Solidarity and Development Party won just 33 seats. US President Joe Biden's government said that it opposed "any attempt to change the outcome of recent elections."

NEST PROTECTION

A GROUP of MPs are calling for hedgehogs to get greater protection in order to help save the species.

The MPs want hedgehog nests to be protected in the same way that badger nests and bat nests are. Former Transport Secretary Chris Grayling wants to add the protection to the Environment Bill in a bid to help safeguard the mammals. This would mean that any developers would have to legally check for hedgehog nesting sites before starting any construction work.

Experts believe there are around one million wild hedgehogs living in the UK. In the 1950s there were around 30 million, which shows just how dramatically their numbers have fallen.

SCIENTISTS have found that a critically endangered species of shark can now be found 2,000km (1,243 miles) away from its usual home.

A team of scientists led by the Wildlife Conservation Society (WCS) have confirmed that the short-tail nurse shark is now living in the waters around Mozambique. Using data collected from underwater cameras, photographs of sharks caught by anglers and a shark caught as far back as 1967, scientists have officially extended the area where the sharks are expected to be found. Experts are now calling for the critically endangered shark to be given legal protection in Mozambique. A full report is in the journal Marine Biodiversity.

LYNX RETURN

A NEW study has been launched to see whether the public supports the idea of reintroducing lynx back into the wild in Scotland.

Lynx are the largest native cat in Europe but were wiped out from Britain more than 500 years ago.

SQUARE POO MYSTERY SOLVED!

Wombats, part of the marsupial family, are native to Australia

SCIENTISTS have puzzled over why wombats have cube-shaped poo for years.

Now, they seem to have cracked it. A team of researchers in Australia has worked out the square shape forms in the mammal's intestines, not as it plops out of its bum. Previously, some experts thought the poo became a cube as it was squeezed through bones in the wombat's pelvis. Another slightly bonkers theory was that the creatures moulded their poo into square shapes after depositing them. But the new research suggests the dung passes through two sets of muscles in the intestines – one that is stiff, and one that is more flexible. The changes in muscle thickness are what is moulding the poo into cubes.

So that explains how they become cubes, but it still leaves the question 'why'.

Dr Scott Carver of the University of Tasmania, who led the new research, thinks it might be because wombats communicate with each other using their poo smells, and that the cube shape helps stop it from rolling away.

The study was published in the journal Soft Matter.

CLIMATE IS AN EMERGENCY, SAY MAJORITY

Deforestation of the Amazon in Brazil

THE largest opinion poll about climate change ever carried out has found that two out of three people think it is now a global emergency.

The United Nations Development Programme ran a huge survey with the University of Oxford called the People's Climate Vote. Citizens in 50 countries were surveyed – including over half a million people under the age of 18.

They were asked if climate change was a global emergency and whether they supported 18 climate policies across six action areas: economy, energy, transport, food and farms, nature and protecting people. Results show a clear majority of people want their governments to take bold and urgent action.

For example, in eight of the ten countries with the highest emissions, majorities supported more renewable energy. More than half of those surveyed want forests and land to be conserved.

Under-18s were more likely to say climate change was an emergency, while more women and girls in the US, UK, Australia and Canada were more concerned about global warming than boys and men.

A total of 81% of people in the UK thought there was a climate emergency.

DOGS LEARN WORDS

DOGS are able to learn the names of new objects.

That's the conclusion of a new study from Hungary, which found that, through play, man's best friend is able to quickly remember the names of different things.

The scientists carried out tests on two dogs: a border collie and a Yorkshire terrier.

In the first experiment, the dogs were presented with a new object in the middle of seven toys they already recognised. The owners instructed the dog to fetch one of the items by its name. In the second test, the dogs played with a new toy while the owner repeatedly said the toy's name.

Both dogs were able to pick out the toys by name – including the new toy, whose name they hadn't heard before. They seemed to know what the new toy was by a process of elimination, which means they excluded the items they already knew by name and then worked out only the new toy was left.

CLOWNING AROUND HELPS

A NEW review of several scientific studies has found that clowns help children and young people in hospital feel better.

A total of 24 studies from ten countries, involving children and adolescents aged 2 to 18, were included. Each study looked at the use of hospital clowns and standard care, compared to standard care alone.

The findings suggest clowns can ease both anxiety and pain that children feel when they're in hospital for a major procedure or long-term treatment. In some cases, symptoms of illness ended earlier when children played with clowns.

But not everyone agrees: a tiny percentage of people have a fear of clowns, called coulrophobia.

DID you know the first home videogame console, the Magnavox Odyssey, was released almost 50 years ago?

While videogames might seem like part of the latest tech, consoles and popular arcade games like Space Invaders and Pac-Man first appeared in the 1970s and '80s. Before that you would have had to stick to playing board games for fun.

The videogames industry is booming and it's predicted that the UK games market could be worth a whopping £10 billion by 2023. Can you see yourself becoming the next big game programmer, developer, or designer? This month, as part of the Yorkshire Games Festival: Bonus Level, discover what it takes to work in the games industry and check out some amazing resources at tinyurl.com/5g1ot60a.

First News has teamed up with sky Kids show FYI and the young audiences CONTENT FUND to make a series of videos for you to watch at home or at school, called I Don't Get It. The plan is to explain stuff that can be complicated or difficult to understand. This week, Ruby explores what can be done to tackle the issue of bullying.

HOW TO BEAT THE BULLIES

SKY Kids FYI presenter Ruby spoke to Place2be and YoungMinds mental health ambassador Katie Thistleton, to learn the difference between 'banter' and bullying.

HAVE you ever been bullied? If so, you're not the only one. In fact, three out of five people are thought to have been bullied at some point.

There are lots of different types of bullying. Bullying could be calling someone mean names, spreading rumours, purposely excluding someone from groups, stealing stuff, threatening people – or even hurting someone.

It can happen anywhere, too – even online.

Sometimes it can be tricky to know the difference between banter and bullying, so Ruby asked mental health ambassador Katie Thistleton for advice.

Katie said: "We all like a bit of banter. It's good to have a sense of humour and you don't want to seem like the one in the group that doesn't like a laugh, but I think we use the word banter a lot when some of the things people are saying can be quite hurtful. So if you find that somebody's words are upsetting you and getting you down, that's not banter, it's bullying."

A report from LGBT+ charity Stonewall found that nearly half of LGBT+ pupils are bullied in school because of their gender or sexual orientation.

Katie told Ruby that "banter should never be about somebody's race, someone's appearance, their sexuality or their disability."

WHAT SHOULD YOU DO IF YOU'RE BULLIED?

One idea from Ruby is "if someone's sending nasty messages over a social media site, just take some screenshots or screen recordings so you've got a record of it, and then just block them."

"If they still find a way to keep on bullying you, then I reckon you should tell an adult you trust. It can be a mum, a dad or even a teacher at school."

Katie also advises that "it is always a good idea to try to talk to a trusted adult like a parent or a teacher, but if you feel like you can't do that, there are helplines as well that you can call." We've put a few in the box below.

After all, as Katie says, we should try to remember that we "should never feel ashamed or embarrassed about the fact that you've been bullied. So many people get bullied – I was bullied – it doesn't matter what you look like, what clothes you wear, how you talk – we're all really different, but that's what makes us really special and amazing. Be proud of who you are."

It's never good to ignore bullying, since it can start to have an impact on your mental health.

Ruby reckons the best thing to do is to talk about it and get it sorted before it turns into an even bigger problem – and we agree here at First News!

● Can you tell us a bit about your new story, Two Terrible Vikings?

My new book is about the riotous adventures of Viking twins Hack and Whack, their wolf cub Bitey-Bitey, their friends Dirty Ulf, the girl who hates baths, and Twisty Pants, who is always bragging about how many ogres and sea monsters he has battled. Hack and Whack track trolls, go raiding and steal all the presents at a birthday party. So the stories are a mixture of wild fun and how I imagine life might have been for children in a Viking village.

● What made you choose Vikings as the characters for this book?

I love Norse mythology and I love funny books about naughty rebellious children, so I combined both ideas. Vikings are pirates, after all, and because Hack and Whack are young Vikings, their parents want them to be bad. So they can steal boats, run off to sea, and rampage. They have enormous freedom and so do I.

● Did it take a lot of planning to create the new characters?

My characters tend to evolve as I write, but I have adored making up the names for the Viking children. I have lists of Norse names for giants and dwarves and I often refer to them to help me come up with characters. My newest one is an evil berserker called Grunt Iron-Skull.

● Hack and Whack are quite naughty! Were they inspired by anyone in particular and what is the naughtiest thing they do?

They are entirely imaginary! I think stealing a boat and sailing off to raid Bad Island is pretty naughty by our standards, but not by Viking ones.

Steve May

● Horrid Henry is a bit naughty too, so what is it about naughty characters that you like writing so much?

I like their energy and the way they do unexpected things. This gives me a lot of freedom as a writer to open doors marked 'Do Not Enter'.

● The book has lots of great illustrations. How closely do you work with the illustrator to make your vision come to life?

Good question. I see my role more as choosing a brilliant illustrator and then standing back and admiring what they do. Steve May is such a funny illustrator, and I knew instantly he was perfect for this book. I think my only suggestion was to have lots of dust around Dirty Ulf, in homage [paying respect] to Pig-Pen, one of my favourite Peanuts characters.

VIKING ADVENTURES

HORRID Henry creator Francesca Simon is back this week with a brand-new tale about a pair of mischievous Viking twins. We found out why she's so fond of coming up with naughty characters!

Steve May

● Have you ever had a go at illustrating?

I am a truly terrible artist, so no!

● You studied medieval history when you were younger, so is there any other era that you would like to set your books in?

I think I'll stick to Viking era Scandinavia for now. I have, however, always wanted to write a book set in medieval France.

● Will we see any more stories about Hack and Whack?

Yes! I'm writing the new book as we speak.

● Lots of families are spending more time at home, so do you think this is a great opportunity for kids to practise their writing?

Absolutely. But they should write the stories they want, to live freely in their imaginations, and not worry about their spelling or what they ought to write.

Steve May

● What advice would you give to kids who want to write their own books?

Keep a notebook and write down any ideas that strike you. Then try mixing up those ideas. Think of a story as a journey. How is your character different at the end from the beginning? What's happened to them to make them change? Ask yourself lots of questions. The answers will be your story. What does your character WANT more than anything? And WHO or WHAT is stopping them getting what they want? When you know the answer, you can get writing.

● If you could give ten-year-old you a piece of advice, what would it be?

One day, your frizzy curly hair will be admired by everyone and no-one will ever call you 'Fire Hazard' again. So always be yourself and enjoy who you are.

Two Terrible Vikings by Francesca Simon is out now!

HAVE A LAUGH

FOR RED NOSE DAY

Comic Relief

COMIC Relief 2021 launched this week, so some of the celebrities taking part have shared their red nose portraits and their reasons for why laughter is so important!

JOE SUGG

"Let's face it, after what has been a very difficult year for many, we could all do with raising our spirits, and Comic Relief is one of those charities that helps do just that while supporting those who need it most. I like to always see the funny side in everything, and I'd say it's my way of coping with things; I'd say it's something we all have in common, that just makes the world a nicer place."

KARIM ZEROUAL

"I'm so excited to be involved in this year's Red Nose Day campaign – I've been a huge supporter of Comic Relief for many years and taking part in last year's The Heat is On challenge in Namibia was by far one of my proudest achievements to date. To me, Red Nose Day is all about having a laugh while raising money for those who need it most, and I can't think of an easier way to help than by picking up some of these amazing goodies if you can spare a little change."

Comic Relief

Comic Relief

DAME JUDI DENCH

"I absolutely believe in laughter being the best medicine. Red Nose Day is something we can all enjoy, and goodness knows during this lockdown everyone has relied so much on television and seeing as many films as they can. I look forward to it enormously. I hope we all have a wonderful laugh and at the same time donate something, as it goes to a very, very good cause."

BENEDICT CUMBERBATCH

"I think laughter is a panacea [cure]; it's always been a national medicine. I think people reached out for it in lockdown; it's a way of getting through life's difficulties and releases the tension to just have a moment's respite from it. And that relief is much needed now."

MO GILLIGAN

"There's just something so special about laughter and its ability to bring people together. Comic Relief has never felt more needed, especially when so many people have had it so tough right across the last year. I'm proud to do whatever I can to help this year's incredible campaign."

SIR LENNY HENRY, COMIC RELIEF CO-FOUNDER

"The last 12 months have been difficult and uncertain for all of us. And the most vulnerable in our communities have been hit hardest. Together, for 35 years, we've seen how having a laugh can make a difference. Laughter has the power to connect people. To bring us together. And can give us a moment of escape. Red Nose Day will be different this year. But we'd love you to join us, even if it's just to share a laugh. If we raise some money along the way, then brilliant. We know that when times are tough, laughter really can make a difference."

Comic Relief

DID YOU KNOW?

This year, the ten Red Nose Day noses are 100% plastic-free! They're plant-based and made from a by-product of sugarcane called bagasse. The noses are designed to look like cute woodland creatures! Get yours from Sainsbury's or comicrelief.com/shop.

Comic Relief's Red Nose Day is on Friday 19 March. There's a whole night of brilliant and funny TV to entertain the whole family and to raise money for the projects supported by Comic Relief!

FIVE MINUTES WITH... MARK WRIGHT

THE radio and TV presenter told us all about his new fitness show for kids.

● What is your new show all about?

Workout the Wright Way is all about keeping active during these confusing and difficult times. It's very important for people to stay active because not being at school or not being at work takes away a lot of natural exercise that you forget about: walking around the office, walking around school, PE at school especially, so we're keeping everyone fit during this lockdown.

● What made you want to do fitness for kids?

They're at an age where using that energy that they've normally got loads of, is very important for their mental state and physical state. For me to be a part of helping that and just helping kids improve their fitness is incredible. It was kind of an overwhelming feeling to be asked to be involved, because it's something that I think is very important, and the fact that I get to do it is incredible.

● What would you say to kids who aren't sporty to encourage them to get involved?

Just give it a go! Give it a go once and I promise you will enjoy that buzz and that involvement. With Workout the Wright Way you're training at home so you're alone, no-one can see you. You can sweat, you can groan and moan, it doesn't matter. I encourage everyone to get involved because it's so much fun and so good for you.

● Were you sporty at school, and were there any sports you didn't like?

I was sporty at school, but then when I finished school, I found it very hard to know what to do when it came to exercise. I had to ask different people and I got loads of different information. That's why I'm so pleased to be giving this to kids, because I know how hard it was when I started. My favourite sport at school was probably football. I wasn't a lover of rugby, but I didn't hate it.

● Have you ever tried any unusual sports?

The most unusual sport I've probably tried is an extreme sport, white water rafting, and I have to say I loved it!

Workout the Wright Way will be on BBC Two, BBC Bitesize and iPlayer at 8:45am every weekday

PICS OF THE WEEK

SNOOPY is back and he's got a brand-new series launching this week on Apple TV+.

The Snoopy Show is based on the iconic comic book series that has been around for 70 years!

If you haven't heard of him before, Snoopy is a beagle who goes on lots of adventures with his pals. Each episode of The Snoopy Show will feature three short cartoons, all based on the classic comic strips.

The Snoopy Show launches on Apple TV+ on 5 February.

THIS WEEK

1 Reece, 14, has been crowned the winner of Junior Bake Off. "This honestly feels like a dream come true," he said. "I have applied twice and I can't believe that I got in to begin with – and then to win, it's just amazing." Look out for some top baking tips from Reece in First News later this month!

2 ITV bosses have confirmed that Britain's Got Talent will not be made in 2021. They decided that making the show with social distancing rules in place wouldn't work. The show will be back in 2022!

3 Disney's newest animated film, Raya and the Last Dragon, will be released in cinemas (if open) and on Disney+ on 5 March. The film will only be available to stream with Premier Access, which means even if you have a Disney+ subscription you will have to pay extra to watch the film.

COOKIE! IS BACK

FOR fans of Wimpy Kid comes the second book in the laugh-out-loud series by Blue Peter legend Konnie Huq. It's filled with scribbles, stories and saving the planet.

Cookie wants to throw a Save the Planet party for her birthday but Suzie Ashby, aka the most annoying girl in the world, has stolen her idea! Will Cookie ever have the eco-friendly birthday of her dreams?

If you're new to Cookie, don't forget to check out the first book in the series!

Head to konnie-huq.com to follow more of her work!

MAKE SOME TASTY SMORES!

Smares are a great American treat that are normally made by toasting marshmallows over a fire and squishing them with some chocolate between biscuits called Graham crackers. Here's our version, perfect to warm you up in the chilly winter months. Don't forget to ask an adult for help with any cooking!

1. We don't have Graham crackers in the UK but you can use a biscuit like a rich tea or a digestive.
2. Place your biscuits on a baking tray. Put some chocolate chunks on the biscuits and some marshmallows on the chocolate.
3. Place the baking tray under the grill until the marshmallow is toasty.
4. Place another biscuit on top of the melty marshmallow, squish down and eat. Yum!

THE BIG PICTURE

FRENCH sculptor Rachid Khimoune poses at a new exhibition of his Tortues de la Paix installation, in the Galerie Italienne in Paris.

The name of the exhibition is French for Peace Turtles, and if you look closely you can see that the 'shells' are actually soldiers' helmets, from the armies of many different countries.

Rachid says that the turtle is a symbol of wisdom and humanity, which hibernates during winter before emerging in the spring. He says this annual cycle is like the suffering that is regularly caused by war, which is what inspired his 1,000 Peace Turtles.

JENGA HERO

IF, like us, you love a good family game, you'll love this impressive Jenga record.

Twelve-year-old Auldin Maxwell, from British Columbia, Canada, has set a new Guinness World Record for the most Jenga blocks stacked on one vertical block.

Auldin successfully stacked a whopping 693 Jenga blocks atop one block, beating the previous record of 485, set last year.

We're not sure about you, but we're totally going to try stacking our Jenga blocks at home during lockdown now.

Though something tells us it's not as easy as it looks!

FUN FACT!

JENGA was first introduced to the public at the famous Harrods department store in London in 1982!

RARE SIGHTING

A SNOWY owl has been spotted in New York's Central Park for the first time since 1890.

The owl delighted birdwatchers when it landed on a baseball field in the famous park, more than 130 years after one was last seen there!

The majestic white owl attracted nearly 100 people, who gathered to take pictures and witness its antics.

Snowy owls are native to the Arctic tundra (cold and flat areas), which makes this sighting in Manhattan incredibly rare.

WANTED! SLEEPING BEAUTY

FANCY getting paid to sleep?

A website team in America is on the hunt for a real-life Sleeping Beauty. That's right, folks!

The lucky candidate will get paid a whopping $3,000 (£2,219) just to get a good night's kip. The catch? They'll have to take on the role of the site's Official Mattress Tester.

The unusual job post on sleepjunkie.com says all the successful napper needs to do is test out different mattresses, then report on their sleep quality, mood and the comfort of the mattress.

At the end of the job, the candidate will not only take home the cash but they'll get to keep their favourite mattress too. Result!

A SWEET JOB

WILLY Wonka eat your heart out!

A company in Canada is looking for people to become candyologists. Sounds pretty yummy already!

Candy Funhouse is offering $30 (£21) an hour to taste test and review some of the company's 3,000 sweet and chocolate products.

All the candidates have to do is try out the goodies and share their honest opinions. Where do we sign up?!

ANNE DE VAREILLES ARCHAEOBOTANIST

If you can imagine a nature and history lover crossed with a detective, that's the pretty cool job that Anne does for Historic England!

WHAT I DO

I'm an archaeologist who studies the segments of plants left behind by ancient people – so I'm an archaeobotanist. Before the age of plastics, humans used plants in so many ways: as construction materials; to build furniture, hunting traps, ropes and nets; to make clothing, baskets and agricultural tools, and for food, of course. My job is to sample for plant remains during excavations and identify them in lab conditions. It's a bit like detective work – once you have all the 'clues', the most interesting part can begin: understanding what the remains tell us about how people lived, what they ate and how they interacted with their natural environment.

HOW I GOT MY JOB

I've always been interested in how the present has been shaped by the past, so I took a degree in archaeology. I did a master's and then worked in commercial archaeology as an excavator and archaeobotanist. I decided I wanted to focus on research, so I returned to university to do a PhD.

WHAT I LOVE ABOUT MY JOB

It's a privilege to handle remains that were once used thousands, sometimes tens of thousands of years ago. You get to travel and work abroad on excavation sites, which can be really fun. I love that we can discover stories about the past and learn from them. On a day-to-day basis I really enjoy being able to use scientific methods to understand human behaviour.

WHAT'S DIFFICULT ABOUT IT

Finding a permanent job in archaeology can be hard. Spaces are limited, especially within academia (working in a university), and competition is high.

WHAT SKILLS I NEED

You need to be passionate about the past. For archaeobotany it also helps to be a budding botanist.

USEFUL QUALIFICATIONS

Universities encourage you to take at least one science at A Level, though specific techniques will be taught during your degree. It helps to think about which part of the human story you're most interested in and which sciences might be most useful.

WHERE YOU SHOULD START IF YOU WANT TO DO THE JOB TOO

Getting involved in a 'dig' is a good idea. It's good fun and will give you an idea of what archaeology is really like. You should also go to university open days and talk to specialists about their line of work.

HOW DO YOU THINK YOUR JOB COULD CHANGE IN THE FUTURE?

I think archaeology will become increasingly scientific as techniques develop.

PRESIDENTIAL POOCHES

DONALD Trump (who was US president from 2017-2021) was the first president to not have a dog since William McKinley (1897-1901) and the first to not have any pets since Andrew Johnson (1865-1869). With new president Joe Biden, dogs are back in the White House, so let's look back at some of the past presidential pups...

George W Bush (2001-2009) had lots of dogs, including Spot the springer spaniel

IT'S NOT JUST DOGS...

As well as pet dogs, Ronald Reagan (1981-1989) and First Lady Nancy had two cats, Cleo and Sara

The wife of Calvin Coolidge (1923-1929), First Lady Grace Coolidge, had a pet raccoon called Rebecca. Kids loved her!

PAVÉ PARTY!

JANUARY'S Animal Crossing: New Horizons update has landed, and it's bringing the party!

The update adds the Festivale celebration, which will take place in-game on 15 February. At the Festivale, you'll meet the party-loving peacock Dancer Pavé.

By catching feathers for the colourful peacock, you'll be treated to a special performance from Pavé.

Also coming to the game are some sweet Valentine's Day items, including chocolate hearts and heart-shaped bouquets!

Along with all that excitement, Nintendo have teased a special Mario-themed update coming in March! Wahoo!

SWITCH SUCCESS...

A FEW weeks ago, it was rumoured that the Nintendo Switch had been a sales success – and this week, Nintendo confirmed it.

The latest figures are in, and it's been revealed that 79.87m Nintendo Switches have been sold since its March 2017 launch, more than the total of 75.94m Nintendo 3DS consoles that were sold between 2011 and 2020!

The top-selling Switch game has been Mario Kart 8 Deluxe, which is now up to a whopping 33.41m copies sold.

...BUT MORE JOY-CON COMPLAINTS

SINCE the Switch was introduced, some of Nintendo's Joy-Con controllers have been troubled by 'Joy-Con drift', an issue where the controllers' sticks move on their own, often ruining gameplay.

After receiving more than 25,000 complaints from countries across Europe about Joy-Con drift, the European Consumer Organisation has asked the European Commission to investigate the issue, and has called for Nintendo to repair faulty Joy-Con for free. The European Commission has said that it is "considering potential action".

In 2019, over 5,000 gamers in the US united to take Nintendo to court over the issue, claiming that the controllers are "defective". The case is ongoing.

Nintendo has previously apologised for "any trouble caused" by Joy-Con drift, and encouraged those who are experiencing the issue to visit support.nintendo.co.uk.

SO LONG, SONIC!

VOICE actor Roger Craig Smith has announced he will no longer be voicing Sonic the Hedgehog, after ten years in the role.

After a decade voicing the blue blur in videogames and on the Sonic Boom TV show, Roger Craig Smith announced on Twitter that he was moving "onward to new zones!" He also sent "much love to the fans who've been so kind."

As First News went to press, there was no news on who would be stepping up to voice Sonic next, but our money is on Ben Schwartz, who played the world's fastest hedgehog in the Sonic the Hedgehog movie that came out last year.

FELINE FUNDRAISING

by Joss Tyson

FAR from using the excuse of horrid weather and another lockdown to hibernate, I set myself the challenge of running every day in January to raise money for cats in need.

I was inspired to take on the feat to raise money for Cats Protection after spotting a neighbour's vegan cake sale that was fundraising for the feline charity, and having got our family cat, Margherita, from a local rescue centre.

As a member of a local running club, and with a love of training in the beautiful surroundings of my home town, I have set myself the task of getting out every day in January, as that's my birthday month. I initially had a sponsorship target of £50; I have already smashed that, and have so far had donations nearing £800 and still counting.

With schools now closed, we are juggling homeschooling and getting out for our permitted daily exercise.

Despite the freezing weather, and with snow on the ground, I have not been deterred. I'm not worried about the cold or wet weather, I just want to help cats! I run for my local running club, Ambleside AC, in all kinds of weather, so I am used to it.

Cats Protection Events Officer Gina Rogers said: "We want to say a huge thank you to Joss for his absolute dedication to this challenge, for running through sub-zero temperatures and snow; the cats in our care will really benefit from all those miles."

BOOKS YOUR READS!

THE BOY WHO SANG WITH DRAGONS ANDY SHEPHERD

reviewed by Isabella Irvin, aged eight

This is the fifth and final book in the Dragons series by Andy Shepherd. This exciting book also has some wonderful illustrations by Sara Ogilvie, who illustrated one of my favourite books, Dogs Don't Do Ballet.

The book is about Tomas and his friends, the Superhero Squad. Tomas has a secret... his grandad has a dragon-fruit tree in his garden that grows real dragons. He and his friends help to look after the dragons, but are faced with new challenges when they discover a hidden secret about the dragons.

They have to launch into action when they also discover that some mysterious people are trying to take dragon-fruit seedlings and experiment with them.

With their own dragons, Zing, Rosebud and Flicker, Tomas and the Superhero Squad hatch a plan to rescue the seedlings and save the future dragons.

I really enjoyed the pace of this book, which is a real page-turner. You need to have read the previous books in the series, as this book continues where the others left off.

It has inspired me to do lots of creative writing during lockdown and I especially like the idea that the most incredible, fantastical things can happen in the most ordinary places.

CALLING ALL YOUNG INVENTORS

THERE'S ONE WEEK LEFT FOR A CHANCE TO WIN £20,000!

SAVING the planet, healthy choices, an ageing population, clean transport and staying connected safely – there are many challenges that we face. They will need many different solutions.

Young people care deeply about making a difference. Using science and technology, they can solve the big problems of our time. The Amazon Longitude Explorer Prize is a competition for young people aged 11-16 that will award £40,000 to teams from schools and youth groups who invent new technologies to solve these challenges.

In 2020 a team from London won. They researched, designed and coded a smartwatch app that helps people with memory loss live more independently. The impressive winners did all of this during lockdown.

The Amazon Longitude Explorer Prize is looking for its next big winners. It is calling on teams of young people to invent a new technology that makes the world a better place. The top 40 teams will work with experts from Amazon next term to bring their ideas to life!

Team Iscort from Greenford High School won last year with their Tomodachi smartwatch app (left)

Here are some of last year's top entries to inspire you with ideas...

First prize is £20,000 for your school or youth group!

The deadline to enter is 12 February 2021. To find out more and to enter, visit longitudeexplorer.challenges.org.

SPORT IN NUMBERS

6 February is when this year's rugby union Six Nations begins, but fans won't be allowed in stadiums due to COVID-19. Italy play France in the opening match, followed by reigning champions England (below) versus Scotland. The women's Six Nations has been postponed until later this year because of the pandemic.

22 -year-old Brit Izzy Atkin (below) won a silver in the ski slopestyle at the X Games in Colorado, USA. But she also suffered a nasty crash on her fourth run and had to be taken to hospital. Luckily, her injuries were not serious. China's Eileen Gu, aged 17, took gold. She became the first woman to win three medals at her first X Games.

6 events are taking place at the same time in one Melbourne venue as tennis pros prepare for the Australian Open, which starts on 8 February. World No1 Ashleigh Barty (below) features in one of the three women's events.

DOUBLE DELIGHT FOR DINA

BRITISH sprinter Dina Asher-Smith won two indoor 60m races in two days in her first competitive events since 2019.

At Karlsruhe in Germany, Asher-Smith equalled her personal best of 7.08 secs. It was her first international appearance since winning world championship gold in the 200m two years ago, and her first indoor race in three years. The winning time was just 0.02 seconds off the British record held by Asha Philip.

Then, two days after her triumph, Asher-Smith won the 60m in Düsseldorf, also in Germany. That time she finished in 7.12 secs. The 25-year-old is due to race next at Liévin, France on 9 February.

She then has three more meets before the European Indoor Championships in Poland begin on 5 March.

There was more good news for Britain at the Indoor Track & Field Vienna meeting in Austria. Eighteen-year-old Keely Hodgkinson (pictured right, in 2020) broke the world under-20 indoor 800m record with a winning time of 1 minute 59.03 secs. Her impressive time shaved two seconds off the previous record, set in 2004 by Ethiopian runner Meskerem Legesse.

MESSI SCORES 650TH GOAL

ARGENTINIAN striker Lionel Messi has scored his 650th goal for Barcelona.

The superstar forward reached yet another career milestone with an excellent free-kick in a 2-1 win over Athletic Bilbao. Messi managed to scoop the ball above and beyond five men in the Bilbao wall, another player behind it, and a seventh standing on the goal-line – as well as the goalkeeper, Unai Simón.

The victory took Barcelona to second place in La Liga, ten points behind leaders Atlético

Madrid, as First News went to press.

Messi has also been in the news for off-the-pitch reasons this week. Spanish newspaper El Mundo published details of his Barcelona contract, revealing that Messi is earning €555 million (£480 million) across a four-year period. Messi's deal ends at the end of this season. It's not known how El Mundo got hold of the confidential contract.
